Privacy is GOOD FOR BUSINESS

Personal information may be valuable to your business, but it’s also something your customers value.

Consider taking the following actions to create a culture of respecting privacy, safeguarding data and enabling trust in your organization.

If you collect it, protect it.
Follow reasonable security measures to protect individuals’ personal information from inappropriate and unauthorized access.

Be open and honest about how you collect, use and share personal information.
Clearly communicate your data use practices and any features or settings you offer to consumers to manage their privacy.

In addition to your privacy practices, do your due diligence and monitor partners and vendors. You are also responsible for how they use and collect personal information.

Nearly 75 percent of Americans feel it is “extremely” or “very important” that companies have easy-to-understand, accessible information about what personal data is collected about them, how it is used and with whom it is shared.*

Don’t count on your privacy policy as your only tool to educate consumers about your privacy practices. Communicate clearly and often what privacy means to your organization and the steps you take to achieve and maintain consumer privacy and security.

Create a culture of privacy in your organization. Educate employees about their role in privacy, security and respecting and protecting the personal information of colleagues and customers.

Nearly 75 percent of Americans feel it is “extremely” or “very important” that companies have easy-to-understand, accessible information about what personal data is collected about them, how it is used and with whom it is shared.*

Made possible by a grant from the Digital Trust Foundation.

Made possible by a grant from the Digital Trust Foundation.